Rescue Squad Reports Calls For Month Of August

The telephone rings, you answer, it may be 10 - 2-4 or any time in between —A.M. or P.M., makes no difference — a voice from the other end of the line says quite abruptly, "Can you go on a call?", you answer "yes", that voice from the other end comes back with a "meet me at the Squad Building" and off you GO! You ask no questions, you simply "head-out", you are needed by someone, somewhere and you are a volunteer worker on the APPOMATTOX COUNTY RESCUE SQUAD — so off you go!!

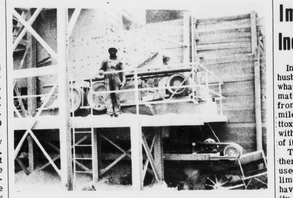
This is not the complete story of your volunteer Rescue Squad. Perhaps it is the most important part, but also important is the fact that you most likely have already put in eight hours or more on a normal work day (it really is necessary to make that "bread and butter" money for you and your family) and are ready to give even more time for rescue training and practice sessions and meetings. Your volunteers on the Rescue Squad don't complain — they just try to render their efficient service whenever and wherever possible.

During the month of August, the Appomattox County Rescue Squad answered 35 calls. We spent a total of 128 man hours and traveled 1661 miles in answer to rescue calls. In addition to this, we have spent members of hours learning to efficiently handle the equipment in the new SWAB vehicle and also becoming familiar with the driving of this vehicle.

A bread down of our calls answered in August is as follows: Transports, 4; False Alarms, 1; Breathing Difficulty, 6; Wrecks, 2; Miscellaneous, 2; Maternity, 1; Chest Pains, 1; Convulsions, 1; and Heart Attacks, 2; Diabetic Coma, 1; Broken Bones, 5; Strokes, 4; Struck by Lightning, 1; Reaction to Medication, 1; Dead on Arrival, 1; Cuts, 1.

We hope you have had a safe and pleasant Labor-Day week end. We have been on stand-by at the Squad Building and at the football games. That's the way it is with your VOLUNTEER Rescue Squad workers, we hope you won't need us but if you do —WE'LL BE THERE.

Plant Aids Farmers County Economy



Langhorne Franklin, veteran worker at the Appomattox Lime Plant, stands near the conveyor at the standing feeder ofthe primary crusher. The ladders, crosspieces, conveyor belt and pulleys coated with limestone give the scene an unusual geometric quality.

Improvements Increase Tonnage

In 1937 Sue G. Johnson and her husband set up operations at what is now known as the Appomattox Lime Plant, not too far from Route 26 and about 12 miles from the town of Appomattox. The exact road number 683 with the plant just to the left of it.

Today, Mrs. Johnson is still there. The gasoline motors, used originally to grind the limestone from a quarry nearby have been replaced by electricity, and Mrs. Johnson still recalls that it was in 1940 when electric power "came through" the area.

J. W. Macdonald is owner and president of Appomattox Lime Co. with Gordon Willis as vice president. The company has recently invested nearly one-quarter million dollars in a gigantic impactor, a holding bin, 130 foot conveyor belt and other modern equipment in order to quarry the limestone quickly, move it to the crusher and storage where lime distributing companies, farmers and others can bring their trucks for easy hauling.

Veteran employees of the company are L. E. Martin crusher-foreman and Langhorne Franklin, who was one of the first workers in the early '40's.

In terms of employee-numbers, the number is small at the plant, and likely to remain so, according to Mrs. Johnson. But, in terms of employee-loyalty and hard-work there's hardly any comparison to be made with other companies, she says. She and her husband enjoyed many years of association with local farmers and other consumers of their high-quality lime. To them and to all the other buyers who come each day, she adds her famous "welcome" to that of the present owners.

The lime plant, at one time owned and operated by the Commonwealth of Va., is now, of course, in private hands. The increase in limestone quarrying and resultant increase in sales of lime can have long-lasting benefits to the consumer and to the county economy, say Macdonald and Willis.

Visitors are welcome to see how lime is prepared for market. The ever-present lime dust in and on the equipment and surrounding grass and walkways, may give a visitor the thought of snow even during warm weather. The lime, itself, a necessity for the farmer who wants to maintain proper pH in the soil, is a useful product of Appomattox county and of course, an economic benefit in many ways.

Open Space Instruction At Pamplin Elementary

When Pamplin Elementary School students returned to their school September 7th,they found that their school had a new look and a new approach to instruction.

Funds became available under Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act that provided for structual changes to the building, carpeting for instructional areas, flexible student furniture and five additional teacher aides. Local funds provided a more adequate heating system for the school, interior painting and plans to paint the exterior of the building in the near future.Local funds also purchased a portion of the student furniture. Title I funds became available approximately one month prior to the opening of school; however, through the cooperation and hard work of staff members, classrooms were ready to receive students Tuesday morning.

Pamplin Elementary School teachers became involved in the development of a school philosophy that resulted in an organizational pattern of continuous progress. The foundation of continuous progress is based on individual differences and flexible instruction that allows students to progress sequentially through levels that are adjusted to the individual child. The goal of the program is to establish a satisfying way for each child to achieve his maximum potential.

Features of the school include a primary block which includes first, second and third year students; and the elementary block which includes fourth,fifth, sixth and seventh year stud-
